EFFECTIVE COMMUNICATION 1

Per the Americans with Disabilities Act, all communications must be equally effective for all people with communication disabilities as it is for people without communication disabilities.

A great file to download and distribute or refer to as needed is the U.S. Department of Justice’s Effective Communication [PDF].

What does effective communication mean? Let’s find out.
People who have disabilities that affect hearing, seeing, speaking, reading, writing, or understanding may use different ways to communicate than people who do not.

Let’s find out some examples…
For people who are blind, or have low vision, or are deaf-blind, effective communication can be done using any or all of the following:

- A qualified person who will read and speak the text accurately and clearly
- Large-print materials
- Braille materials
- Electronic materials that can be used with assistive technology
For people who have speech disabilities, effective communication can be done using any or all of the following:

- A qualified speech transliterator
- Allow more time
- Assistive technology such as communication board, pen and paper
- Written materials
For people who are deaf, have hearing loss, or are deaf-blind, effective communication can be done using any or all of the following:

- A qualified notetaker to take accurate and clear notes
- A qualified language interpreter who can present accurate and clear information in sign language, oral language, cued-speech, or tactile language
- Assistive technology such as captions
- Written materials
A great file to download and distribute or refer to as needed is the U.S. Department of Justice’s Effective Communication [PDF].

Bonus power points to you for printing it out and posting it somewhere for everyone to educate themselves.
The best approach is to ask then adapt to the individual.

"How would you prefer we communicate?"

Let the individual respond and then adapt your skills to include their preferred communication method and languages.
DISCUSSION BY MARK MCGUIRE 1

Just because one person prefers a specific method of communication does not mean that every person with a similar disability prefers the same method.

• Some deaf and hard of hearing people do not know sign language
• Some deaf and hard of hearing people have limited reading and writing skills
• Some deaf and hard of hearing people understand sign language better than spoken or written language
• Some DeafBlind people do not know sign or tactile languages
Let's put ourself in different situations and discuss how would some of us communicate that we need help?

On a sidewalk with people passing us?

In a loud environment where no one can understand each other?

In a room where no sound can get through?

Reset your nervous system and mindfulness

Reflect for one minute and observe what has come up for you. It can be a physical sensation, a memory, emotion, or a thought.

UPDATE ON 911?
TEXT-TO-911

The Miami-Dade Police Department is finalizing plans to upgrade to allow for the acceptance of text-to-911. Included here is a sample of how this may look once the upgrade and testing is completed.
911 Operators can activate a silent chat using the Carbyne software available today. Callers can chat and send pictures from their cellular phones.
TDD/TTY

Our current phone system accepts TDD/TTY calls from traditional teletypewriters.
REAL-TIME TEXT (RTT)

RTT is an accessibility feature that is available on most modern cellular phones such as iPhones and Android-running devices.
